INTRODUCTORY NOTICE.

THE second year's Exhibition of National Portraits, following chronologically the first, commences with the reign of William and Mary, and terminates with the last century. Unlike the collection of the preceding year, it occupies a period in which both the persons represented and the painters are more generally known, and their identity is less a matter of question and opinion. The same rule as last year has, however, been observed: the portraits are strictly labelled and catalogued as described by their owners, and it has not been deemed proper to supply the name of the painter, if not given by the owner.

The first part of the collection falls upon the most barren period of art in England. The pupils and followers of Vandyke—Dobson, Riley, Greenhill, and Joseph Michael Wright, men of much promise, and our earliest native painters—had all died early in life, and before the period embraced by this year's Exhibition. Lely, followed by Kneller, had for many years monopolized the practice among the great and the fashionable, and now the long career of the latter was drawing to a close. His art, however meretricious, possessed at least a spirit and a vigour which descended to no worthy successor, though it found many imitators, and his portraits are conspicuous in the early part of the collection. He died 1723.

Michael Dahl, a Swede (b. 1656, d. 1743), succeeded to the Court favour and general patronage. He was of the Kneller school, but solid and heavy in his manner—wanting in taste and expression, yet giving to his portraits the impression of a faithful likeness. Among his works in the Exhibition, his Queen Anne and her Son, (No. 80), may be pointed to as a favourable example of his art. Another foreigner gained at the same time distinction here, —Sir John de Medina, a Fleming (b. 1660, d. 1711), came to this country at the age of twenty, and settled in Edinburgh. His portraits are spirited, well drawn and coloured, and are distinguished among the mediocrities of the period. Several of them find a place in the collection. Three other foreigners practised in London about the beginning of the 18th century, whose works and names are remembered in connexion with the portraiture of our country—John Vanderbank, John Baptist Vanloo, who met with especial patronage, and Joseph Vanakin, who found employment chiefly as a drapery-painter, and was of such value to our half-taught artists, that Hogarth satirized them attending his funeral in a body.

Some native painters now again made themselves known, and first among them Charles Fervas (b. 1675, d. 1739), who, while he had no claim to the exaggerated praises of his friend Pope's verse, has been, perhaps, too much depreciated since. His art was founded on the traditions of his predecessors. His heads are well drawn, but without expression; his draperies solid and crudely painted; his works without invention—one and all alike. Jonathan Richardson (b. 1665, d. 1745), was contemporary with him, and the two ranked at the head of their profession. Jervas excelled in female portraiture; Richardson in the careful truthfulness of his male heads, in which there is evidence of an attempt to study nature more literally than his predecessors. Sir James Thornhill (b. 1676, d. 1734) must also be mentioned: he is well known by his decorations at Greenwich Hospital and St. Paul's Cathedral, but he also painted some portraits.

Portraiture, which, under the able artists who early resorted to this country, has left us such cherished remembrances of our great men, such true images of their mind and character, had now sunk down to mere face-painting, our painters being satisfied with the mere form alone. Fuseli said, that he who follows another must be behind, and they had so long followed one another that they were far behind indeed, and equally so from truth and nature. At this time William Hogarth (b. 1697, d. 1764), having served his apprenticeship as an engraver on plate, made a run-away match, and tried to support his young wife by portrait-painting—an art which has never failed to find encouragement. Hating all the old traditions, he resolutely determined to follow his own path, and to paint nature as he saw it. Several of his portraits, and of his so-called "conversation pieces," will be examined with interest in this collection. They show the germs of that original art which culminated in his "Mariage à la mode," and commenced a new epoch and the foundation of a school of native painters.

But it is hard to oppose fashion, and following the old track, among several painters of less repute, Thomas Hudson (b. 1701, d. 1799) now took the lead. He was deemed the first portrait-painter of the day. His art was tame and lifeless, representing the very dregs of the old traditions. It is said that it extended no further than the head of his sitter, and that all the rest was the work of the drapery-man. At the same time, George Knapton (b. 1698, d. 1779), Francis Cotes (b. 1726, d. 1770), and John Russell, his pupil (b. 1744, d. 1806), were reputed chiefly for their portraits in crayons. In contemporary notices of the art of Cotes, a portrait of the Queen, with the Princess Royal on her lap, is always spoken of in terms of high praise. This work is in the present collection (No. 459), and gives a pleasing impression of the artist's ability.

Such were the representatives of English art during the earlier years of George the Second's reign, which towards its close was graced by the genius of Reynolds and Gainsborough, names imperishable in the records of our art. Sir Joshua Reynolds (b. 1723, d. 1792) was the pupil of Hudson, whose teaching and stale traditions he soon abandoned, and, devoting himself to the study of nature, he sought, by the force of his own original genius, to imitate her true beauties and grace, making every work a new study, trying new colours, new mediums, and new methods, unsatisfied even with his great success. Hence new and hurried processes, used in order to catch beauties beyond his reach, experiments which time would not sanction, fading colours, and a decaying surface, leaving only the wrecks of past beauties. All this is but too obvious in the present Exhibition; yet Reynolds's fame is sustained by numerous brilliant exceptions, and of many so-called faded works the ruin is due, not to the painter, but to the cruel hand of the repairer, who, though his skill may preserve much, can never restore that which is gone.

Thomas Gainsborough (b. 1727, d. 1788), called in his lifetime a landscape-painter, stands side-by-side with Reynolds in portraiture. His great genius was obscured during his life by the brilliant talents and fame of Reynolds, and it was not till our day that his pre-eminent merit as a portrait-painter has gained general recognition. In simplicity, grace, and truth, he has equalled Reynolds, and if behind him in power, he probably excels him in individuality as well as in purity and sweetness of execution, while his works have this great advantage, that they have resisted the effects of time.

Contemporary with the above two eminent painters were several artists who practised portrait-painting with much success, and examples of whose works find a place in the Exhibition. Of these the chief were Allan Ramsay (b. 1709, d. 1784), a Scotchman, whose portraits, though wanting in grace, are manly, unaffected, and show much power; Nathaniel Dance (b. 1730, d. 1801), who drew well, and produced a good likeness, but having married a wealthy lady, early abandoned his profession; Johann Zoffany, a native of Frankfort (b. 1733, d. 1814), who had much practice in London, and for a time in India, painting portraits and small portrait groups with much original ability; George Romney (b. 1734, d. 1802), a man of genius, but deficient in executive power, yet for a while the rival of Reynolds; and Joseph Wright of Derby (b. 1734, d. 1797), who painted some good portraits, and also subject pictures. To these we may add the historical painters, John S. Copley (b. 1737, d. 1815), and Benjamin West (b. 1738, d. 1820), both of whom occasionally painted portraits.

Sir Thomas Lawrence (b. 1769, d. 1830) was the direct successor of Reynolds, and began very early a career of great success. Some of his works come within the scope of this Exhibition, but he must be judged by his later and more formed style, as shown in his portraits painted in the present century, which are reserved for the third year's Exhibition, completing the series.

The foregoing are then the portrait-painters who, for nearly two centuries, were recognised as the heads of the profession in this country. They painted all who were distinguished by talent, rank, or beauty. Many of their most esteemed works find a place in the present Exhibition; and it does not appear probable that such a collection, especially of the portraits of Reynolds and Gainsborough, has ever before been brought together.

SAM. REDGRAVE.

N.B. The Catalogue has been compiled by Mr. R. H. Soden Smith, and Mr. R. Forster Sketchley, the Secretary, who are both Members of the Committee.

The Exhibition for the next year will commence with the portraits after 1800; and will include, as supplementary, the portraits of any distinguished persons who have not been duly represented in the previous Exhibitions.

Offers of portraits for exhibition next year may be addressed to The Secretary, Department of Science and Art, South Kensington; or they will be received in the office of this Exhibition at the eastern end of the Galleries.

SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, SOUTH KENSINGTON:

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION IN 1867.

THE Lords of the Committee of Council on Education have determined to hold, in the Spring of 1867, a Second National Portrait Exhibition at South Kensington, in the Arcades overlooking the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens.

This Exhibition will consist of the Portraits of persons living between the years 1688 and 1800, and is the second of a series based upon the suggestions made by the Earl of Derby, in a letter dated 6th May, 1865, from which the following extracts are made:—

"I have long thought that a National Portrait Exhibition, chronologically arranged, might not only possess great historical interest, by bringing together portraits of all the most eminent contemporaries of their respective eras, but might also serve to illustrate the progress and condition, at various periods, of British Art. My idea, therefore, would be to admit either portraits of eminent men, though by inferior or unknown artists, or portraits by eminent artists, though of obscure or unknown individuals. I have, of course, no means of knowing, or estimating, the number of such portraits which may exist in the country; but I am persuaded that, exclusive of the large collections in many great houses, there are very many scattered about by ones and twos and threes in private families, the owners of which, though they could not be persuaded to part with them, would willingly spare them for a few months for a public object.

"The question of one, two, or three exhibitions in consecutive years, would, I apprehend, be mainly decided by the result of future inquiries as to the probable number of pictures which could be obtained, and the space which could be found for their exhibition. But whether the period over which each exhibition (if more than one) should range be longer or shorter, the point on which I should set the greatest value, in an historical, if not in an artistic point of view, would be the strict maintenance of the chronological series. I shall be very happy if any suggestions of mine should lead the Committee of Council to take up seriously, and carry out, with such alterations of detail as experience might suggest, a scheme which I think could hardly fail of being generally interesting: and I should have much pleasure in placing temporarily at their disposal any portraits from my collection at Knowsley which they might think suitable for their purpose."

The Committee of Advice, as now constituted by my Lords, consists of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, and the following other noblemen and gentlemen:—

By order of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

ARRANGEMENTS APPROVED FOR THE EXHIBITION.

1. The Exhibition is specially designed to illustrate English history, and the progress of art in England. It may be divided into two or three sections, representing distinct historic periods, exhibited in successive years, depending upon the number of the portraits received and the space available for their proper exhibition.
2. It will comprise the portraits of persons of every class who have in any way attained eminence or distinction in England, from the date of the earliest authentic portraits to the present time; but it will not include the portraits of living persons, or portraits of a miniature character.
3. The portraits of foreigners who have attained eminence or distinction in England will also be included, with portraits by foreign artists which represent persons so distinguished.
4. The Exhibition will be held at South Kensington, in the spacious brick building used for the Refreshment Rooms of the International Exhibition in 1862; and these galleries, which are perfectly dry, will be fitted up especially for the exhibition, and patrolled day and night by the police.
5. All charges for the conveyance of pictures accepted for exhibition by the Committee will be defrayed by the Department of Science and Art.
6. The exhibition will be opened on 1st May, 1867. In order that the portraits may be properly arranged and catalogued, they will be required not later than the Twentieth of March. They will be returned in the month of September at the latest; but though the exhibition will continue open until the end of August, any owner who may wish his contributions returned after July will have them forwarded to him at once.
7. In accordance with the usual practice, the Science and Art Department, unless the owner objects, will take photographs of the portraits for the purpose of instruction in the Schools of Art, and for sale to the public through the medium of the Arundel Society; but no permission will be granted to any private person to photograph without the owner's express sanction. Two copies of each photograph taken will be presented to the owner of the picture photographed.
8. As was the case at the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862 (and as is usual at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions), the Department cannot be responsible for loss or damage, but every possible care will be taken of works lent; and it may be added, that the numerous paintings lent for exhibition in 1862 were collected and returned by the same agency as will be now employed, free from any injury or damage of any kind.
9. All correspondence, marked on the cover "National Portrait Exhibition," should be addressed to the Secretary of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington Museum, London, W.
